In conclusion, the Court defined only murder in the first and murder in the second degree, saying:

"If you find that the defendant took his wife to the Harrison Swamp with intent to kill, then you must find him guilty of murder in the first degree.

"What does the evidence show? Does it prove that this man went into the swamp with the victim of this terrible crime, no, it shows that an undersized SHAW MAKES NEW man, a man a head shorter than Whit-more, pessed down through that swamp at 10 o'clock at night. The man came back. The woman was not seen again. We have this from the evidence of Watchman Coogan. And who called Coogan? The prosecution called Coogan and Coogan told the truth.

The defendant's lawyer switched to the topic of criminology, and declared that his client was a victim of it. At that his client was a victim of it. At 15 1-5. breaking Kraenlein's record of this the prisoner covered his face with his big long hand and laughed. He laughed again when his counsel quoted the following verse of his own composition:

"Oh, happy crimonologist, who does not need the facts,

Who only watches while his imagination acts,
"He does not need to try to find the truth that may be hid,

Be only needs to dream and dream, and then the thing is did."

"The State," urged Mr. Vickers, "has called fifty withesses, every person who case, whether the testimony helps of injured the State's case. Could we be more manifestly fair? Were there any other withesses to cail but the defendant and the character of the young man which had been assailed by Mr. Simpson. Then he took up the testimony of Mrs. Daniel O'Neill, who said she saw Whitmore at his home at 9.40 on Christmars night.

"It was not until we found Quinn," cried the prosecutor, "that it occurred to Mrs. O'Neill that she had seen Whitmore at flome on Christmas night. Before Quinn told of seeing the defendant in the Jersey City train shed Mrs. O'Neill remembered only that she last saw Whitmore at four o'clock on Christmas afternoon. Then came Quinn, and her testimony of "Gold Tooth Billy" Bartlett, and his associations with the defendant.

"The prosecutor dwelt at some length on the destinony of "Gold Tooth Billy" Bartlett, and his associations with the defendant.

"The fact still stands out," said Mr. Vickers, "no matter what may have been said about the witness selling his mustach to Mr. Clemens for S. that the defendant continued to be an associate and friend of Bartlett, after the latter had angered him, and let his wife go out on the street with Bartlett wife."
